Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: ...are required to rotate. A short lever R, also fixed on shaft B, and cord S raise the double catch T for similar reasons. Spring hammers and catch are raised by the weavers hand through lever U, Fin. i7i. cord or wire V, and lever W fulcrumed upon the spindle to which sprocket N is fixed. Since the catch T is double, for working backwards as well as forwards, a stop is provided in set-screw X to limit the travel of lever W and thus prevent the bottom catch from being raised into contact with the cylinder head when the weaver is reeling back. Bracket Y is flexibly mounted on the short spindle Z in order that the chain O may accommodate itself to the slight variations in distance between the centres of sprockets L and N, due to the movement of the slide rods. It is of course necessary that the cylinders should be placed out of reach of the needles before any attempt is made to reel back the cards, but that being done, the weaver simply pulls lever W down to the horizontal position with the left hand, and rotates the hand wheel N with the right hand as rapidly as she can. Various ratios of gearing can be arranged, but 4 or 5 cards for one revolution of the hand wheel N gives a sufficiently rapid movement to the cards. Five cards per revolution makes mental counting of the cards reeled a simple matter for large numbers, but four cards per revolution enables the weaver to count or to place single cards in position with greater certainty, since the handle 2 must always occupy one or other of the four cardinal points of the circle. A numberirfg or counting apparatus, consisting of the usual worm and worm wheel, and shown at 3 may also be provided, but this is usually neglected by the weavers, who prefer to count mentally where counting is necessary. Further advant...
