

Funding the Nation: Money and Nationalist Politics in Nineteenth Century Ireland

Daniel OConnell created the Catholic nation in 1820s Ireland and in the process he gave birth to popular politics. Ahead of America where Andrew Jackson was creating his own brand of popular politics, OConnell brought together rich and poor in support of a new phenomenon that became the popular political party. OConnell began the shift in power from landed wealth to democratic nationalism. His success was built upon by Charles Stewart Parnell who created the first truly effective political party in the 1880s. The success of both OConnell and Parnell was based on the flow of money into their organizations to sustain their political machines. By following the money trail, Michael Keyes reveals in this ground-breaking book how OConnell turned money into political power and how sixty years later Parnell did the same. Until now there has been no serious examination of how early nationalists raised money, how they accounted for it and occasionally how they misappropriated it. In telling this story Michael Keyes fills a key gap in our knowledge by showing us that popular funding was the life blood of Irish nationalism and was the key ingredient in a movement that went from political exclusion to political dominance in nineteenth-century Ireland.
