

Fortune favors the bold: the secret of how to get a job you always wanted

I am sure you can relate sent hundreds of job applications, checked email so many times a day hoping to see the magical we are pleased to inform you. butnothing. Not a single response from hiring managers. I am sure you told yourself that most likely you were not a good fit, maybe they did not get it or maybe they lost it. Well, even if you were a good fit, your Resume did not impress the hiring managers. It is not a secret that recruiters and/or hiring managers receive hundreds resumes for one job opening. Therefore, they have a very limited time to review each Resume. Many sources say its about six seconds for the majority of hiring managers to reach the go or no-go decision. Despite you think you are a perfect fit for the firm and the job advertisement is only missing your name, unfortunately, little typos, bad formatting, selection of a wrong font or addition of irrelevant information may result in no-go decision. Think about your Resume as a self-promoting tool that communicates your assets to an employer. Not a description of your glorious life but an invitation to open discussion further. This book shares tips, information and insights on how to make your Resume stand out from the crowd and avoid a no-go decision.
