

Grandma Lois Says....: A Journal that reads like a book

This is an usual journal written by a senior who has lived through the Second World War right up to and including the modern digital age. Her writing is liberally spiced with humor as she portrays her life through the journals 150 bloggs. While recounting her memories and thoughts and reporting on events that happened, she depicts small slices of her life from her childhood and through her married life of 55 years, with the same old Grandpa. She certainly has an opinion about everything. Authors note: While this work is a journal and somewhat autobiographical in nature, it often reads like a novel and I really wont mind if some skeptics say, bulltweety from time to time.
